1. [redacted] a Soviet construction bureau:

a. A Soviet naval unit with the [redacted] arrived at the Garz (N 54/L 20) airfield on 3 February 1950. It was necessary to haul 540 beds from Schwerin (M 54/T 46) to Garz for this unit, which was administratively assigned to a headquarters in Swinemuende (N 54/L 21). (1)

b. New construction plans relative to the Peenemuende-Karlshagen (N 55/P 83) airfield were being prepared on 22 February 1950. From observations made so far it is inferred that the project was primarily for the reconstruction of the destroyed airfield buildings. The chief of the district administration concerned was ordered to stop delivery of stones and bricks to private individuals. (2)

c. No preparations or any plans for an expansion of the Tarnowitz (M 54/0 30) airfield were known on 22 February 1950. (3)

d. It was mentioned [redacted] 25X1 [redacted] for the Wustrow peninsula (M 55/0 51) that the landing field of the airfield was not to be reconditioned. (4)

Comment:

Fast information [redacted] has always been correct. Following are detailed comments: 25X1

The arrival of a naval unit at the Garz airfield is reported for the first time. According to information of October 1949, (5) no air unit was stationed at the field. An unidentified air force unit was quartered in the airfield barracks. The Garz airfield is assumed to be assigned to the Naval Air Corps, Baltic Command.

(2) The construction work planned at the Peenemuende airfield still seems to be restricted to the airfield itself. There are no indications of intended reconstruction of the former V-weapons test plant.

(3) The information on the Tarnowitz airfield disagrees with another report of December 1949(6), according to which building material was allegedly hauled to this field.

(4) It was stated in other reports that the airfield on the Mustraw peninsula was not scheduled for reconstruction. According to information(7) [redacted] an airfield was to be laid out near Klein Mustraw. This project does not seem to have started yet.
